

Titanium Ring - Strong Enough to Last

Contributed by Henry Schweizer
Friday, 31 August 2007

So you're looking for a wedding ring? Traditionally, diamonds have been associated with love because of their immense durability, their ability to last for eternity - but what about metals? Gold has been associated with love because of its purity and brightness, but it doesn't have that durability which you'll be hoping for in your marriage. Perhaps you should consider a titanium ring.

Over time, gold rings get worn away simply because gold is a soft metal. Silver rings suffer the same fate. Titanium rings, on the other hand, are built to last many lifetimes even if they're worn every day. A titanium ring won't corrode like cheaper jewelry and it won't suffer from wear and tear, no matter what you do while wearing it. A titanium ring is, quite simply, the toughest kind of ring on the market. When you give a titanium ring, you know you're giving something which is going to last.

Perhaps a titanium ring doesn't seem very romantic, but that depends on what you want from romance. A titanium ring says that your commitment is being made for the long term.

It's solid and dependable. Titanium rings are available in a wide range of styles, from strong masculine designs to slender jeweled bands, so choosing a titanium ring needn't mean compromising on appearance. Titanium rings are very sophisticated and are becoming increasingly fashionable as people begin to realize their potential.

A wedding ring is the most important piece of jewelry you'll ever buy in your life, so it's all the more important that you get it right. With a titanium ring you know you're getting something special. If you're looking for a ring for a husband-to-be who generally feels uncomfortable about wearing jewelry, you may find that a chunky titanium ring is perfect for him. He'll enjoy its solidity and strength and won't feel that it's inappropriately fancy. A well chosen titanium ring will say something about his character as well as making a strong statement about your love.

Titanium rings are very difficult to scuff or scratch, so when you choose a titanium ring for your wedding you can be sure that it'll look just as good at your golden wedding anniversary. A titanium ring set with diamonds can bring together two of the world's toughest materials to make a truly enduring statement. Titanium rings are ideal for people who work with their hands, who may find that other rings are easily damaged or have to be removed during the course of their working day. Titanium rings are also hypo-allergenic, so can be worn day in and day out no matter how sensitive you are.

Titanium rings are a fairly new addition to most jewelers' stores, so you may not have considered them as an option before, but now that you understand their advantages you'll understand just why it is that more and more people are choosing them. Nothing says 'forever' quite like a titanium ring.

Henry Schweizer runs the Titanium Rings Review site.

Everyday you'll find a new titanium ring model reviewed, plus useful tips and tricks on how to choose, buy and care a titanium ring. Check it out at <http://www.titaniumringsreview.com>